Singer/Songwriter Stu Nunnery To Resume Musical Career

If you were listening to music in the mid-seventies, you may or may not have heard of Stu Nunnery.

Yet his 1973 self-titled album release featured not one, but two hits: "Madelaine" and "Sally From Syracuse" that made it to the Top 100 on the U.S. pop charts. His single "Lady It's Time To Go" was the Number One record in Brazil in 1976.

In 1974, High Fidelity Magazine had this to say: "Word is that Stu Nunnery is America's next singer-songwriter of note. Nunnery's debut album backs up that assumption." Record World Magazine called Nunnery "One of the top ten newcomers to the recording industry."

Nunnery's music remained a staple on pop and rock oriented radio programming throughout the 70's in the English-speaking world.

But in 1983, the artist slipped from the limelight - his musical trajectory thrown off line by a series of ailments that forced him to end his music and performing activities – he thought – forever.

And now, forty years after his debut album was released, Stu Nunnery is back.
